

Mirabile Trial

A dummy, wearing a bloody sweat shirt and bathrobe worn by Tony Mirabile, slain San Diego tavern owner, made a garrish appearance in the trial of four men accused of his murder. The figure was used to demonstrate where the shots in the right arm, chest, abdomen and groin, were fired by his killers. On trial for the Dec. 28 killing are Henry Thwait, 46, of Torrance, and three other men.

Summer Geography Refresher Course Advances Student World Knowledge

Where is Australia? Where are its isthmuses, peninsulas, and promontories? What is its latitude and longitude?

Questions like these were asked and answered by members of Darold Kusch's fifth, sixth, and seventh grade class at Fern-Greenwood Elementary School this summer, as the group took part in a "work-study skills" experiment.

In this program, great emphasis was placed on learning geographic skills and research techniques. Children took a test at the beginning of the course to see how well informed they were in geography. Later in the course they took a second test on the skills.

The average student in the class improved his knowledge about two grade levels. One student improved nearly four grade levels, although five remained the same or decreased slightly. On the first test, scores ranged from 4.7 through 11.2. On the second test, the range was from 5.4 through 11.5.

School officials were quick to point out that the test and program were not conclusive, nor did they suggest a radical change in program. What was proved was that such a program is one promising way for the students to learn geographic skills and reference study techniques. In some of their work, the students used Australia as the basis of study. They did research on the subject and made maps of their own continent. They learned the differences between political, physical, and relief maps. Similar programs were also carried on in classes at Parkway and Hamilton Elementary Schools.
